PLANNING AHEAD: A NOTE FROM DSHS

Throughout the COVID-19 pandemic, DSHS has requested federal emergency food allotments for households receiving food assistance. For the past two years, eligible households have received the monthly maximum food allotment instead of the amount they would normally receive based on countable income and expenses. At this time, we do not know when the public health emergency will end, but DSHS wants to remind clients that these emergency allotments will only continue as long as the public health emergency is in place and as states are federally approved on a month-to-month basis. While these additional benefits have been a great help for many Washington households throughout the pandemic, it is important that Basic Food recipients are prepared for the reality that these emergency allotments will eventually be coming to an end.
